MARCIA'S FREEDOM.

By MARION MANVILLE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

The announcement came like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. Marcia Deane had broken her engagement with Jack Kelly.

They had been lovers from childhood, always together, always devoted and absolutely loyal to each other, and now, just a few months before the wedding day, the unexpected happened. The young people were planning a snatching expedition, and Jack had called, as he did every evening, to tell Marcia the details.

"We start from Lawton's at 8, so I will come for you a little earlier. You will be ready?" There was scarcely a question in his voice.

Marcia was always ready. He had wished up that subject, and his thoughts were busy with something else when it dawned on him that Marcia's answer and tone were quite different from what he had expected. She had risen and was speaking rapidly, intensely.

"No, I shall not be ready then or any time again, Jack. I'm not going with you any more, and here's your ring." She thrust the mute emblem of their past happiness into his hand, stood expectant a moment; then, as he did not speak, she turned from him and walked into the house.

Jack was too dazed to move. How long he sat there he never knew, but at last he went away. The light and happiness had been crushed out of his life at one blow.

Fall slipped into winter, and the usual festivities began. Jack Kelly never appeared at them, but he heard of Marcia, first with one man, then with another, the belle of the season. And Marcia enjoyed her freedom. For the first time in her young life she was receiving attention from other admirers than Jack, and she was constantly comparing them with him.

Sam Duncan was splendidly big and handsome, though his eyes lacked the genial twinkle, the tender sympathy of Jack's. Dan Henry was extravagant, and she was sure it was wrong—not that she could endure a stingy man, Jack was generous, too, but he had some principle about it.

Ted Reynolds fell in love with Marcia at once and insisted on taking her everywhere. He was full of fun, a brilliant talker and an all-around good fellow. Marcia liked him immensely.

NEW HOPE FOR LIBERIA

Results of Visit of American Commission

REPORT SOON TO BE MADE

Relating to Investigations.—Meyer is Going to Canada on Fishing Expedition.—Trouble at Ellis Over $25 Requirement.

Washington, July 15.—A new lease on life is expected to be accorded to Liberia, the little African republic, as a result of the report now being prepared here by the American commission which investigated conditions there for the State Department. The Liberian administration is anxious to have the United States lend the aid of officers to assist in the conduct of its affairs and to confer with Great Britain and other governments with a view of giving moral support to Liberia. While declining to discuss the nature of the treatment they will recommend, the commissioners said that Liberia is not bankrupt, and the Government, although in some respects crude, is generally a good one.

A REVOLT AMONG IMMIGRANTS

Inspector at Ellis Island Forced to Show Revolver to Check Mutiny.

Disgruntled aliens, angered by the Government's $25 pocket-money rule yesterday indulged in a near-mutiny at Ellis Island. An inspector was forced to draw a revolver. Alexander Rudniew, a young Russian, who came here to complete his medical education, but who did not have the necessary $25, was credited with stirring up the trouble. He is held for deportation to Antwerp. After delivering an excited speech to seven hundred aliens protesting against deportation his followers became so restless that to avoid trouble at dinner the seven hundred men, instead of being marched into a common dining-room, were divided into four divisions and fed in different rooms. Rudniew, speaking Yiddish, nevertheless created such a disturbance around the table he sat that the display of arms was necessary.

SECRETARY MEYER GOING FISHING

Hopes to Catch a Few Salmon in Canada Before License Expires.

Secretary of the Navy Meyer is anxiously awaiting the adjournment of Congress so he may get away from his official duties for a vacation. He anticipates some good sport at fishing in Canada as soon as he leaves Washington. Mr. Meyer is anxious to get some salmon fishing in the Canadian woods. "I have taken out a license and paid for the privilege," added Mr. Meyer, "and as the season for salmon fishing ends there August 15, I naturally am anxious to get away in time to catch a few fish." The secretary will spend some of his vacation at Hamilton, Mass., where he has a summer home and which is near the summer capital, Beverly.

Who Owns the Air?

Who owns the air? Or, rather who owns the great unknown way of the universe, on which puny man has launched his latest system of communication.

These seem to be absurd questions, but already international complications threaten to arise over them. The strange situation all comes about through the latest developments of wire less telegraphy.

As might be expected it has remained for the far corner of the Northwest, the Pacific frontier, to be the battle ground for control of the ether. Already there are sullen rumblings of the coming conflict. The Canadian government wireless telegraph operators are wondering when a more satisfactory agreement will be made with the Americans than now exists for sending programs.

It is a curious fact that when two wireless stations are working, another station in the vicinity can break into the ether way and stop the working stations. In the operators, term this is known as "interference." To some extent science has overcome this difficulty by the use of a device known as the tuner. With this instrument the operators, however, restrict the use of the atmosphere again, so that in the end the struggle for air is little further advanced than if the tuner was not in use.

The tuner has this advantage: it allows an operator to work in peace, even though others want to interfere and get their message through. And again, looking at it from this viewpoint, it is a skin of beauty is a joy forever.

JOHN GOODE DEAD.

Was Known as The "Grand Old Man of Virginia."

Norfolk, Va., July 15.—John Goode, aged 80, statesman, lawyer and soldier, died yesterday, following a stroke of paralysis sustained several weeks ago.

John Goode, affectionately known of late years as the "Grand Old Man of Virginia," was, without doubt, at the time of his death, the most conspicuous man in the state, in point of years and honors. He was the sole survivor of the Virginia secession convention and was said to be the oldest ex-member of the national congress. He also was a member of the Confederate congress.

Mr. Goode was admitted to the bar when a young man. He joined the Confederate army as a member of Gen. Early's staff. While on the field of battle he was elected to the Confederate congress. After the war he moved to Norfolk, and he practiced law. He served three terms in congress from the Norfolk district, being the first Democratic representative from that district after the war.

During President Cleveland's first administration Mr. Goode was appointed solicitor general of the United States and served for some time. He failed of confirmation in the Senate, however, it is said because of political differences existing between him and Gen. William Mahone then a senator from Virginia. President Cleveland in his second term appointed Mr. Goode a member of the United States and Chilean claims commission.

Mr. Goode was the author of "Reconstructions of a Lifetime," and a series of articles entitled "Civilian Chiefs of the Confederacy."

SHOT INTENDED FOR ANOTHER.

Man Kills His Wife in Altoona, Penn.

Altoona, Penn., July 15.—Frank E. McMillan, aged 31, shot and instantly killed his wife, aged 23, at their home in Greenwood, a suburb, last night, with one of a fusillade of shots directed at William E. McDowell, said to have been the woman's paramour. McDowell escaped unhurt.

McMillan, who has been employed at night as a railroad car inspector, had long suspected his wife, and instead of going to work last night, remained in the neighborhood of his home. Near midnight he went to the house and peering through a window saw McDowell, he claims, and when the man ran toward the rear door he fired again through the door.

The woman was hit by one of the bullets fired through the window and was dead when McDowell entered the house.

McMillan was arrested at his father's home later. His story of the killing agrees with that told by McDowell. It is stated that McDowell had been associating with the woman for a long time and at the instance of her husband had once been warned in writing by a lawyer to keep away from her.

This is the third killing in this city within the past six months from the same cause.

Taking It Too Literally.

"What do you mean, sir," roared an irate father to a rejected suitor for the hand of his daughter, "by bringing your portmanteau to my house and ordering a room?"

"I'm adopted as one of the family," answered the young man coolly. "Your daughter said she would be a sister to me!"

CHILDREN'S GARDENS.

They Furnish Pleasure During a Person's Entire Life.

The children of the present day have more opportunities afforded them of engaging in gardening, and are given greater encouragement and facilities than those of former generations. There was a time when young people were somewhat grudgingly awarded an odd corner in the garden, to do their best with, and if they were not imbued with a true love of flowers the little plot soon went to wreck and ruin and became an eyesore, covered with weeds and utterly neglected. Nowadays it is very different; there are school and college where gardening is practically taught to the more favored classes, and in many of the other schools scattered throughout the country the young scholars have excellent opportunities of becoming efficient gardeners. They not only learn the names of plants and flowers, shrubs and trees, and how to cultivate them properly, but they know something of the different soils, how to work and enrich them with advantage, and the nature of the destructive birds and insect pests, and how successfully to cope with them.

We have alluded above to the old style of children's gardens. In careful and loving hands they became little paradises and were bowers of bloom in spring, summer and autumn. The woods and fields were laid under contribution for primrose, violet and other roots, especially when the children went playing among the cow-slips and oxlips, and there were, besides the old fashioned garden flowers, pansies, polyanthes, auriculas, daisies, and splendid pinks and fragrant wallflowers, and about mid-summer the gorgeous snap-dragons, the sweet-williams and stocks and pinks. How proudly the youngsters would point to some patch of delicious magnolia or some other sweet smelling flower! Perhaps the solitary gooseberry or currant bush, which looked as barren and wretched in the neglected garden of careless children, had been carefully tended and made to yield a fine crop of fruit, and the border of mustard and cress supplemented with a few lettuce and radishes. How cool and crisp were the latter, and how pleasantly pungent the mustard and cress! It is not improbable that the youthful gardener had an eye to business and drove a hard bargain as regards the salad, especially if it came early to market—Poor encouragement for the young gardener! But it was only rudimentary gardening then. The children's garden of the present day are far more ambitious affairs, even if the old fashioned flowers be not neglected, as, alas! they sometimes are, in favor of new varieties with high sounding names. Still, whatever aspect, so long as they are well cultivated, children's gardens assume, they should be encouraged, for not only is gardening healthy, but instructive, and many an hour, which would have been idled away or spent unprofitably, is turned to good account. And the young gardeners, while their flowers or crops are growing, take quite a keen interest in the weather, which previously perhaps they had not closely observed. They are responsive to showery days, for the fruit of their plants to advance, and after a spell of dry weather, albeit the winds have been chill and keen, they know that the time has come to sow their seeds; and instead of deploring and anathematizing the pouring rain, they know that it will help their plants to grow and their seeds to germinate. They make mental notes of what the weather is like at certain times of the year, or perhaps note down their observations in a diary to help their memories. Such notes will form a pretty good guide, which they will follow with advantage.

Those who are middle-aged or growing old have loving memories of their little gardens of long years ago, perhaps situated in some distant shore; nor will they, we are sure, begrudge the youngsters of the present day their greater advantages and more ambitious pleasures. Do not the old, well-mellowed red birch walls, with snapdragons and wallflowers on their tops and in their crannies, rise to our recollection once more? The fruit trees in blossom, the peas running up the sticks, the ribwort leaves broad and crinkly, and the crisp, yellowish green lettuce beginning to assume shape and form. It is our Old World productive garden, and in an odd corner of it are the little patches we so assiduously cultivated as children. A cherry tree was trained against the wall, and from them, in beautiful white virgin blossom in May, time; and presently we played bob cherry with the fruit. We remember that the blossoms faded and the fruit set until it plumped and plumped and grew larger and larger, becoming at last ready, lusty and heavy. We were proud that the tree stood in one of our little gardens, and it was not the only fruit which grew there, for there was a prolific gooseberry bush, which bore a tempting variety of "golden drops." A few lettuce and radishes were raised, but most of the little plot was devoted to flowers, many of them of the old fashioned kind enumerated above, and the woods and fields were full of wild flowers then, we frantically dug up a few primrose and violet and cowslip roots, to mix with the garden varieties.—London Globe.

Concerning Two Sounds.

When Joseph Henry Lumpkin was chief justice of Georgia a case was brought up from Columbus in which a wealthy citizen asked for an injunction to prevent the construction of a planing mill across the street very near his palatial residence. His grounds for complaint consisted chiefly in the proposition that the noise of the mill would wake him too early in the morning.

"Let the mill be built," said the chief justice in rendering his decision. "Let its wheels be put in motion. The progress of machinery must not be stopped to suit the whim or the fears of any man. Complainant's fears are imaginary. The sound of the machinery will not be a nuisance. On the contrary, it will prove a lullaby. Indeed, I know of but two sounds in all nature that a man cannot become reconciled to, and they are the braying of an ass and the tongue of a scolding woman."—Atlanta Constitution.

Wonderful Fleet of the Lakes.

Standing beside the writer on the dock at Quebec one day was a grizzled old captain who, for twenty years in command of some of the fastest passenger and freight steamers on the Great Lakes was getting his first touch of salt water navigation.

We were watching a transatlantic liner enter port, and as the vessel sped toward the pier with small-like pace the fresh water sailors' impatience increased.

"Must have a fine captain, coming in like that," he commented aloud, unmindful of the fact that he was amid strange surroundings.

"It's the pilot that's bringing her in careful like," volunteered one of a group of officials awaiting the docking of the vessel.

"Pilot be blowed!" burst forth the veteran of the lakes, unable to longer restrain himself. "Say, if I ever had a deckhand who couldn't bring a boat in quicker'n that I'd kick him and his damage overseas!"

On the spot the man from the Great Lakes was made a member in good standing of the Annapolis Club. He realized this from the contemptuous grins of those about him, and it only stirred his wrath anew. Delving into an inner pocket he brought forth a crumpled bit of newspaper and shoved it under the noses of those who would discredit him.

"Read that," he commanded with the air of one accustomed to being obeyed. It was a ten-line item from Duluth, recounting in the most matter-of-fact way how in seventy minutes a steamer had taken in 9,277 tons of iron ore there being in port all told but a trifle over two hours.

"That lubber you fellows call a pilot couldn't make a landing that quick," sniffed the fresh water mariner contemptuously. "There's another."

The second was a dispatch from Cincinnati, Ohio, telling that a steamer had unloaded 10,416 tons of iron ore there in a trifle over four hours, an average of better than forty tons of ore being lifted from her hold every minute the operation was in progress.

"That's the way they do things up there on the lakes," he snorted defiantly, folding up the bits of paper and clanking away. "From 'Greatest Fleet Needs No Subsidy,' in the August Technical World Magazine."

The Opinion of a Rebellious Wife on Divorce.

What one woman thinks about divorce is contained in a remarkable article called, "The Confession of a Rebellious Wife," in the July American Magazine. She says:

"Occasionally, in desperate moments, I wonder if there is any way of escape for me. As I grow older such moments happily, do not come so often. I am many women go through the same experience. Some women decide that they were mistaken about life and try. It is simply the result of wrong consideration of the inevitable. I have not yet reached that conclusion. I deny that such as a life as mine is natural or inevitable, or right or even justifiable. It is simply the result of wrong conditions. Some women try to change the conditions by the way of the divorce court. They merely secure, at the cost of dreadful pain, a second brief period of happiness to meet again the same miserable situation. Divorce is no solution while men and conditions remain what they are. And yet I rejoice in the increasing number of divorces. They are calling attention to the defects of marriage as marriage now is. The clergymen and other social reformers declare that divorce is an evil. But the evil does not lie in divorce; it lies in the relation that makes so many people seek divorces. The reformers would have more reason to be shocked if they were aware of the vast number of women who are dissatisfied with marriage as they know it and have not the desire or the courage to seek divorce. I, for example, should prefer to endure what I now endure than go through the horrors of seeking a divorce and of being classed as a divorced woman and of living without any established and respected position in the social world."

Keeping Boys and Girls on the Farm.

The American corn belt devotes sixty-five million acres to the crop and raises one hundred and three quarter billion bushels, adding a billion dollars to the wealth of the nation every year. It comprises the twelve states of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Indiana, and in addition to producing three fourths of America's chiefest crop leads the world in the output of dairy products and the yield of oats, barley, timothy and potatoes. But the greatest crop, which it has at last devoted itself to raising, is that of farm boys and farm girls.

Great and wealthy as the corn belt is, it has at last wakened to the fact that I cannot much longer lead the world in raising corn and oats and barley "and other things" if it does not at least try to lead in rearing boys and girls who will stay on the farm. By means of the new science of agronomy it has within recent years learned how to increase its cereal and dairy yield. Unlike Mark Twain, who claims to be the only farmer in Connecticut who can "make two blades of grass where three grew before," there are a hundred thousand farmers in the corn belt who have learned literally how to make two blades of grass and two ears of corn where but one grew before. But of what value is the knowledge if sons and daughters are to quit the farm leaving corn-belt prosperity to the hapazard agriculture of the city-born and of transplanted foreigners who find conditions and climate vastly different from those of the Fatherland? Therefore the corn belt has at last set itself to raising that greater and more valuable crop of farm boys and farm girls, who will stay on the farm. Financial recompense on the farm—"Catching Them Young," in the August Technical World Magazine.
